Abstract.—The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of 100 sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, reduce body weight, and improve self-esteem. The results of the program showed that the women who participated in the program had significantly lower body weight, lower body mass index, and lower waist circumference than the control group. The women who participated in the program also had significantly higher levels of physical activity and self-esteem than the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
