What's the deal with testing? The United States might have more COVID-19 testing capacity than any other country. So why have we seen laboratories overwhelmed and many patients again waiting a week or more for results? At the heart of the crisis is a reliance by public and private labs on automated testing equipment that locks them in to using proprietary chemical kits and other tools made by a handful of manufacturers.

What is Arizona doing? Sonora Quest Laboratories - a partnership between Quest and the Banner Health hospital chain - handles 80% of Covid-19 tests in Arizona, making it the largest testing network in the state. ADHS is partnering with Sonora Quest Laboratories to expand processing capabilities of COVID-19 diagnostic tests. Under this partnership, Sonora Quest expects to increase processing capacity to 35,000 diagnostic tests per day by the end of July, and up to 60,000 tests per day by the end of August.

The Governor's Office worked with ADHS, the White House and HHS to procure an additional Roche testing machine for Sonora Quest Laboratories to further bolsters testing in the state. The Roche testing machine helps expand testing throughout the state by delivering quick results and processing a high volume of patient samples. These efforts build on previous actions to expand testing for all Arizonans, including the most vulnerable and underserved populations.
